

Hannah Heinzekehr

Hannah Heinzekehr is the Senior Director of Engagement for the University of Notre Dame's Institute for Ethics and the Common Good. In this role, she leads the team amplifying the wide-ranging work of both the Institute and the University's Ethics Initiative through storytelling and communications outreach. She focuses on inviting new audiences to engage with the Institute's many opportunities for learning, research, and collaboration meant to address some of the most pressing ethical questions facing our global community, including how to center human flourishing and formation in the midst of rapid AI development.

Prior to this role, Hannah served as the Senior Program Director for Strategic Communications in the Office of the President at Notre Dame, and spent 15 years in a variety of nonprofit advancement and storytelling roles, including 10 years working for various Mennonite Church USA agencies. She holds a Master's degree in leadership and theology from Claremont (California) School of Theology and graduated from Bluffton (Ohio) University with a B.A. in communications and theology and a minor in peace and conflict studies.

She and her husband, Justin, live in Goshen, Indiana, and have two middle-school-age children. She's an avid soccer fan, a lover of books of all kinds, a proponent of building a good custom playlist for any occasion, and a big fan of bringing people together for a meal or in-person celebration of any kind.
